TrialPad for iPad

For the past month we have been working hard on preparing for three trials using TrialPad on the iPad. Most of the attorneys are excited to use TrialPad due to it being a remarkable tool and they get to play with their iPad's in court.

If you are not aware of what TrialPad is, it is a document presentation tool for the iPad to be used in court. It will project documents, present "call outs" (this is where a single line or paragraph is magnified), play video, play audio and provide a whiteboard.

You may be saying that you can do all of this on a PC, which is true. The appeal of the iPad, though is its compact size. You also have the universal appeal of the iPad. As one attorney noted, when he was doing jury selection, half of the jury pool had their iPads there with them.

One other item that we are utilizing is Dropbox. With a Dropbox connection, TrialPad can download the entire trial folder. If you use iTunes, you can grab multiple documents, but not folders. For my way of thinking, Dropbox and the use of folders is easier.

To prepare our trial teams, we are having a series off Lunch-n-Learns, where we will go over their trial documents in TrialPad, use the tools and get them familiar with the TrialPad environment. This is a key element. The same attorney that worked with the jury selection said that because he had been using TrialPad and the iPad for a number of weeks before hand, he was able to control the entire presentation himself and not have to rely on a second person.

More to come as we complete trials and talk about how TrialPad worked for them.
